The surprising fact is that the human service of courtesy which is so reasonable and so free of dollar cost is comparatively rare in many areas of daily living. Many people overlook the little niceties which make others feel warm and comfortable inside.

of Europe from the East. The new NATO boss has mastered the useful trick of talking around a question so emphatically that he can seem candid when actually practicing evasion. I witnessed such a performance at his

NATO headquarters last year. Norstad had told visiting newsmen that NATO had nearly as many planes as Russia, or at least as many as Russia could commit to European operations. Someone observed that numbers don't tell the whole story, and asked if NATO air power exceeded Russia's. Norstad commented favorably on the acuteness of his observation, and delivered a forceful lecture on the subject of numbers and why they don't mean much. But he didn't answer the question.

Incidentally, the resignation of General Alfred Gruenther as NATO commander was a big surprise here. There may be more to this than meets the eye.

ACE MAY NOT be exactly the size for a house dog but he doesn't know it. He thinks that is what he is, and so he stays in the house most of the time. When he goes outside it is for only a little while. One evening the man of the

"You are not going to track up my floor" she told Ace. The dog looked unhappy.

"I'm going to put these on your feet" she continued, as she lifted one of his big paws, slipped the cellophane bag on it and secured it with a rubber band. Ace didn't want the old lumsy

"You can't get it off" she told him, "It won't come off" and put the others on.

"You'll either have to wear them" she said, "Or stay in." Well, it looked like there was nothing else to do, so out he went and after awhile she heard him at the door again. She opened it and there he stood, the cellophane bags still intact, but muddy. She took them off and in he came, just glad he didn't have to wear those funny things in the house, too. - H. L.

Many persons may be astonished to learn there are more people hospitalized for mental illness today than for all other diseases combined. Some two and one-half million men, women and children were treated for some form of

While it often means the expenditure of extra effort, time and money, a true American cannot find it in his heart to ignore a plea in behalf of the needy, the sick, the unfortunate. Yet they are doomed to long, hopeless years as mental patients-not because there are no known treatments which can make them better-but because most hospitals do not have the professional staff, supplies and equipment to give these patients the treatment which could bring about recovery

The same holds true for the millions of Americans suffering from less severe, but nevertheless disabling mental disorders-the neuroses. WASHINGTON - The American Society of Newspaper Editors, meeting in Washington this week will be interested in the findings of Congressman John Moss, the diligent California Democrat who, more than any other public official, has been digging into press censorship.

Moss took a trip to Europe last summer to ascertain whether American newsmen overseas are having trouble getting news from Ameridiplomats and generals. He found that most correspondents feared reprisals if they criticized the officials on whom they depend

"I found," says Moss, "that it's hard to get newspaper people to put their experiences in writing." Back in Washington Moss has also had a hard time getting newsmen to cooperate. He got excellent news tips from them personally and orally, but they didn't want to testify or stick their necks out in any way that might bring retaliation from government officials or close up their news sources. Note - Moss has tried to keep politics out of his censorship investigation. He says Republicans aren't to blame for the growing suppression of news about the government. Nor are

Medicine and Taxes It's hard to believe, but Internal Revenue has granted tax exemption to a clinic that the Food and Drug Administration has accused of peddling quack cures. . . . Food and Drug brought legal action forcing the Electronic Medical Foundation to stop selling an electrical contraption in interstate commerce which was supposed to cure a host of ailments, but which Food and Drug charged was medically worthless. At the same time this agency stopped the clinic from selling the gadget, Internal Revenue made the same clinic tax-exempt. . . . One satisfied user of this electrical cure-all is Mrs. Ezra
